Permanent Sprinkler

If your grass is brown because you hate baby-sitting a lawn sprinkler or can't justify the price of an irrigation system, the Watering Made Easy permanent sprinkler may be the cure. Once you've installed a below-grade station (about $40 each), you simply connect your garden hose to supply water to the pop-up sprinkler. Three styles of stations are available to accommodate watering areas of different shapes and sizes. With a manifold ($21) and several hoses, you can run five stations simultaneously. The system can be purchased online at the company's Web site and will soon be available in stores.
